Disaster Site Worker Course Workshop Ensuring Skilled and Other Support Personnel are Prepared for Disasters

May 21–22, 2008
Beaver, West Virginia

Location: IUOE National Training Fund/National HAZMAT Program facility and the MSHA National Health and Safety Training Academy

Sponsored by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services' National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences (NIEHS), Worker Education and Training Program (WETP) and the U.S. Department of Labor, Occupational Safety and Health Administration's, OSHA Training Institute

Purpose and Scope

Pre-incident training is critical for workers who may find themselves responding to a disaster. Skilled and other support personnel (such as construction, utility and transportation workers) along with federal, state and local government workers and others may find themselves working on a disaster site, be it during the response, cleanup or recovery stage. These populations need to understand the unique hazards that are present on a disaster site before they are deployed there.

The Disaster Site Worker courses (OSHA 7600 and OSHA 5600) arose from a clearly identified need at Ground Zero and can save lives during disaster responses by providing workers who respond to disasters the critical knowledge they need to protect themselves. To date, limited use of this course has been reported, raising concerns about the lack of pre-incident training being provided to disaster site workers.

The following issues will be discussed:

- Developing solutions to the challenge of delivering pre-incident training to those who are likely to be on a disaster site
- Policy changes and other strategies to increase pre-incident disaster training
- Challenges for improving the courses
